Customs continues to hold back funds from distribution pending final resolution in the courts of the legality of the Byrd Amendment requirement that to be eligible to receive payments a domestic producer must have supported the antidumping petition. The U.S. Court of International Trade held that this requirement is unconstitutional, but its rulings have been overturned by the Circuit Court. The U.S. Supreme Court denied a petition for certiorari last month, but the issue may be subject to further review if a request for a rehearing is filed.

Customs advises those domestic producers that didn't support these antidumping petitions to file claims. All producers must file claims by August 2, 2010 and it will not be known whether further legal appeals will be heard until after this deadline passes.
